

Lookout Tojo! this is a Family War

TOP: Standing next to a large pipe cutting machine in Port Townsend, Washington, papermill is Charles Schwinn, pipe fitter, who has six sons and a son-in-law in military service.

RIGHT: At his duties as welder in the Port Townsend, Washington, papermill is Ole Tjemsland, who has four sons, a daughter and son-in-law in military service.

These pages reveal why the Axis will never win this war. Hard-working Dads and fighting Dads—yes, and grand, sacrificing American mothers, too, just won't stand for it. Represented here are seven families in several Crown Zellerbach mill communities who have given twenty-seven children to their country's cause. These are typical only of how hundreds of parents are making sacrifices that merit a salute to courage. One of these boys is listed as missing in action. We join in prayers that one day he will be found, safe and well, on one of the thousands of war-torn isles that dot the southern seas.

James McEnry and his sons Delmar Loren and Thomas are all in the United States navy. All three are from the Camas, Washington, papermill. McEnry served in World War I.
